GENERAL CANAL -In reference to the ante cedents of General Boisrond Canal, who is trying to upset the Government of President Domingues and his nepliew, Septimus Rameau, the following is a brief sketch: -

He is about forty-four years of age, is six feet two inches in height, of every commanding presence and of mixed blood. He took part in the revolution of last May, when Generals Brice and Montplaisir were killed. He fought his way out of the city to his plantation at Freres, where he resisted the Government troops, and in the fight several officers and soldiers were killed. He subsequently went to the village of Petronville, where he and his party were dis lodged. Canal then fled to the residence of United States Minister Bassett, where he re mained from May till September. Meanwhile the Government impeached him for treason, and he was sentenced to death. The refusal of Mr. Bassett to surrender him nearly caused complications with this country, but through the friendly offices of the Haytian Minister, Mr. Preston, it was agreed that Canal should be al lowed to leave Hayti and go into banishment. This was done, and Canal went to Kingston, Jamaica. There, with other exiles possessing about $1,000,000, he plotted for the overthrow of the Domingue Government. Recently the Octavia was purchased with her cago of arms. General Canal has been always a soldier, and in 1869 captured Port au-Prince, the capital city, which caused the overthrow of Salnave, and he is generally looked upon as a brave and honest man. Domingue recently became a grandee of Spain and member of the Order of Isabella la Catolica after his consent to banish Cubans from Hayti.

Jacmel, where the revolution is now progressing, is about eighty miles across the mountains from the capital city of Port-au-Prince. Troops have left for the scene of action, and the two Haytian gunboats, built a few months ago, will doubtless be ordered

THE TRADE IN WILD ANIMALS -A writer for the Mittheilungen des Vereins fur Erkunde, of Leipzie, has just furnished an interesting article on the wild animal trade of Europe. He says that the whole business was formerly done by two men-one an Italian named Casanova, and the other Charles Hogenbeck, of Hamburg. In 1862 Casanova made a treaty with the wild tribes of Taka, Africa, engaging to take all they could capture, which resulted in the purchase from them of hundreds of beasts and reptiles. These were subsequently sent to the different zoological societies of Europe, and are now on exhibition. In 1874 one M. Von Reich, of Asteid, went to Kassala and captured and bought from the African chiefs 26 giraffes, 22 elephants, 4 Caffre buffalo, 6 rare antelopes, 2 tapirs, 2 gorillas, 5 hyenas and 3 leopards. Immediately afterward Hogenbeck imported 33 giraffes, 10 apes, 10 elephauts, 13 antelopes, 4 hons, 5 leopards, 4 hyenas, 5 ostriches, 8 rhinoceros and a number of huge serpents. It takes from seventy to eighty days to bring the animals from Kassala to Hamburg. From the interior of Africa to the coast they have to drive the elephants, giraffes, antelopes, buffalo, &c., on foot, fastened together with ropes and chains. Often, through the negligence of the negro attendants, the lions and leopards get out of the cages during the transit and create a general stampede, causing loss of life and great loss of money.

A TARTAR'S FAITH IN MANKIND .- There are few people who have not felt the pleasure of a good bargain. Once in a way it is a useadventure and rarity in it to be harmless. Some men are as utterly without the spirit of barter as M. Huc describes the Tartars to be, and for the want of this sharpening influence, they are the Washington at 8:30 a. m.

Washington at Ohio cars at the Baltimore as easy dupes as he pictures them to their keen, rapacions Chinese neighbors. Yet his own dealings with this simple people furnish so apt a contrast to the grasping temper that we cannot do better than conclude with an example of their method of transacting business. The missionary having offered a Tertar Lama his scales to weigh the silver tendered in payment of a sheep, the Tartar stepped backward, there is a heaven: below there is an earth, and Buddha is the master of all things. He desires all men to treat each other as brothers. You are of the west; I am of the east. Is that any reason why our dealing should not be frank and true? You have not cheapened my mutton; I take your silver unweighed."-London Saturday Review.

A PLEASANT ANECDOTE. - The Gaulois tells this anecdote of Adelios Patti (the Marquis: de Caux :) Adelina Patti went to America when a very young girl. On the voyage the vessel foundered, and, of the forty seven persons on board at the time, only three were saved, two sailors and Adelina, who escaped through the efforts of one of the sailors named Pacaud. Two years ago Patti, in passing through Luettich, Belgium, learned that her rescuer, was living in that city as a Commissionaire. She procured his address, and called on him in company with her hu band. She found him in exceedingly modest circumstances, surrounded by a family of five children. These she loaded with presents, and at parting said to her res cuer: "If you should ever stand in need of my services, remember I am your debtor and you need but write to me." Pacaud did not forget her promise. He lately arranged a grand concert for the benefit of the aged and infirm, and called upon the Marquise de Caux to participate, and she gave her consent. He then offered a prize of a medel worth 200 france for a bouquet to be presented to the fair singer at the concert, and all the florists in Luettich are competing for it.
